DESCRIPTION
This two-day course is designed to update the occupational health nurse regarding the assessment, intervention and evaluation of common problems encountered in the work setting. Topics will include chest pain, respiratory ailments, head injuries, penetration/foreign body injuries, musculoskeletal strains and sprains, skin lacerations, mental health, thermal injuries and infectious disease exposure. The program will also include introductory ergonomics principles so the occupational health nurse can identify the work-related risk factors of musculoskeletal disorders and recommend basic workplace changes. Components of a comprehensive wellness program will be described.

OBJECTIVES
Following this program, the attendee will be able to assess patients with selected presenting conditions. Attendees will identify protocols and guidelines for management to include emergent and stabilization measures and treatment of occupational health conditions in the presence of existing co-morbidities. Appropriate documentation will also be covered.

WHO SHOULD ATTEND
This program is intended for occupational health nurses or other clinicians who provide direct health care services for workers. This program should be particularly valuable for service providers staffing medical stations or clinics within worksite facilities or plants.
SUMMARY OF TOPICS

Common Musculoskeletal Injuries
Small and large joint musculoskeletal injuries commonly found in occupational health settings will be discussed.

Ergonomics
The workplace risk factors associated with musculoskeletal disorders will be described.

Head Injuries
Current assessment, treatment and evaluation guidelines for brain contusion and concussion will be covered.

Dermatological Concerns: Lacerations, Thermal and Chemical Injuries
Current assessment, treatment and evaluation guidelines for the management of selected dermatological traumas will be discussed.

Chest Pain: Sorting Through the Diagnostic Picture
Comparing and contrasting emergent and non-emergent chest discomfort in the occupational health setting will be discussed. Subsequent management guidelines will be reviewed.

Respiratory Ailments
Current management practices and medical guidelines in selected common occupational health respiratory conditions will be covered.

Infectious Disease Exposure
National guidelines and protocols addressed related to common infectious disease concerns.

Penetration Injuries
Emergent care in penetration injuries occurring in occupational health settings will be discussed.

Addressing Mental Health and Wellness Programming
Depression and anxiety are two common mental health concerns in the workplace. Screening, assessment, intervention, referral and follow-up of these illnesses will be discussed. Components of a comprehensive wellness program will be described.
